Good to know

MRI stands for magnetic resonance imaging. It allows you to take pictures of your body by using a strong magnetic field and radio frequency pulses.

A cardiac MRI scan produces images of the heart muscle and valves and is used to assess both its structure and function.

A cardiac MRI is used to diagnose a wide range of heart conditions, including coronary heart disease, congenital heart disease, heart value disease, and cardiac tumours.

Using cardiac MRI, we can:

- Assess the structure and function of your heart chambers, valves and major vessels.
- Diagnose cardiovascular problems such as cancers, tumours and inflammatory conditions.
- Evaluate the symptoms of coronary heart disease such as limited blood supply and heart muscle scarring as a result of a heart attack.
- Detect the blockage of blood vessels and plaque
